The majority of CPGs that were pre-2014 \[@CR6\] were published between 2013 and 2015 (34.7%) suggesting that dissemination of the CPGs has slowed down. This is because CPGs provide specific recommendations on the use of medical products and do not require regulatory authorities to give permission for their use in order to facilitate their wide dissemination. Therefore, the WHO has assumed responsibility for dissemination and implementation of CPGs since 2012 \[@CR1, \@CR2\]. The WHO's adoption of the IHR in the context of the CPGs program is encouraging, but limits its influence in countries that lack effective regulatory systems. However, the WHO IHR have been widely regarded as a statement of the WHO global norms for the implementation of the CPGs program \[@CR32, \@CR33\]. In this regard, the WHO must continue to assume global leadership for the implementation of the CPGs program. The African region had the highest number of CPGs produced (65.3%) suggesting that the region is one of the most active regions in this regard. This may be due to the fact that the African region has the most human resource-intensive countries with Africa having the largest number of doctorates and the highest number of patients for many diseases. This may also be explained by the availability of funds and the number of CPGs in the research literature (Additional file 2{ref-type="media"}: Figure S2). However, the highest number of African countries (35.7%) did not produce any CPGs indicating the dearth of research in the region. When viewed as a whole, the WHO IHR overall have played a vital role in drafting CPGs, but it is worth noting that some of the CPGs did not directly comply with the
